

We were there at Hookipa in the 80's when windsurfing changed from a sailing class to a form of extreme self expression. We saw Mark Angulo invent the wave 360; we saw it all. Back then, just as now, we spent our mornings designing sails and our afternoons on the water. Even though the sport changed over the decades, the passion stayed the same. And we draw on this passion to build the Taka.

The Taka is a special sail, designed for hard core wave sailors. Hardcore wave sailors are a small group of windsurfers who stand out for being passionate in a sport of passion-driven people AND who live with sandy car seats, religious devotion to forecasts, and dreams of dropping into breaking waves. These are people who need a sail that is effortlessly maneuverable while wave riding but still stable and powerful in a straight line. They need a sail that will withstand the bomb set wave as it breaks on their head. They need a sail that they can trust not to break, especially when the conditions are critical. They need a sail built 100% for waves with no compromise in performance or durability. We, dedicated wave sailors ourselves, know these challenges—and so we make the Taka.

The Taka's 3 and  $\frac{3}{4}$  battens are designed to make the sail 100% neutral when luffed—sheeted out. This makes bottom turns and cutback effortless. This is the sail we choose for easy backloops, wave 360's, and double forwards.

Performance is not just about easy tricks, so we tweak the Taka to accelerate early and have a massive low-end wind range. Many wave sessions require a sail that can adapt to dropping winds—we all know that the best wave sessions are the ones when the wind drops and everyone else has come in.

And like all Ezzy Sails, rigging gauges allow anyone to get the perfect downhaul and outhaul in seconds.

We meticulously cut, stick, and sew the Taka in our very own factory. After sewing, we rig, calibrate the downhaul gauge, and thoroughly check every sail before we slip it in the bag.

Wave sailing is our heritage, and the Taka is our passion project for everyone that loves the feeling of bottom turning and flying above the lip's spray.
